

Where is the National Security Strategy (NSS) in the Special House Committee on National Security's Call for Memoranda?

It is sad to note that it was under representative rule of the last twenty years that the need to have a national security strategy document was hatched and rolled out.

The first National Security Strategy (NSS) came out in 2014. The shelf life of the NSS ended in 2019. The second NSS was unveiled by Mr. President and the NSS is seemingly guiding national security now.

The NSS was not needed under military rule that owned the security house and the national security home then.

Why does civil rule need a National Security Strategy (NSS) when it has no Security and National Security conception of its own construction is one question that should agitate the Special House Committee on National Security?
